

Time People Forgot

The National Gallery of the Cayman Islands opens the quincentennial year with an exhibit featuring Cayman's past.

Time People Forgot will present black and white photographs from the late 1700s to the 1990s by Patrick Broderick.

The exhibit includes portraits and scenery. Mr. Broderick, primarily self-taught, enjoys photographing people, saying, "documenting people helps to convey the spirit of a time or the life of a place."

Gallery Director Leslie Bigelman adds, "The National Gallery is pleased to start this Quincentennial year with an exhibit that focuses on our past and highlights the work of a Caymanian photographer. The images invoke nostalgic memories and acknowledge the accelerated development in these islands."

She encourages everyone, especially families, to attend the exhibit opening on Saturday, 4 January 2003, from 6.30-9pm.

Time People Forgot runs until Friday, 31 January 2003. Call 945-8111 for more information. (GIS)

This photo of the ironshore and Dr. Roy's house is on display in the National Gallery exhibit Time People Forgot, which features photographs by Patrick Broderick.