

Take a walk down memory lane

On January 4th an exhibition of Caymanian images by Patrick Broderick opens at the National Gallery of the Cayman Islands. 'Time People Forgot' is a collection of unpublished photographs taken by Patrick between 1979 and 1999. Patrick is accredited as a Master Photographer and Certified Professional Photographer. His clients include National Geographic, Merrill Lynch and the Cayman Islands Department of Tourism. He works in all areas of photography ranging from portraiture to architecture but his passion has always been people and their lifestyles. Patrick is available for all your photographic requirements, contact him at: ✉ pbp@candw.ly

1 Gone Fishing 1988. Fishing has always been a pastime for locals and they were free to launch almost anywhere on the coastline.

2 Dr. Roy's 1980. Dr. Roy McTaggart's home was for many years a landmark in George Town. It served as a reference point for ships at sea. This two story home built in 1915 was one of Caymans longest standing homes until 1991.

1

Gone fishing

2

Dr. Roy's

Gramma Julia's 1979.

4

This home was a well known landmark in West Bay. It is a prime example of a home with detached kitchen, bathroom and cistern

East End Shack 1986.

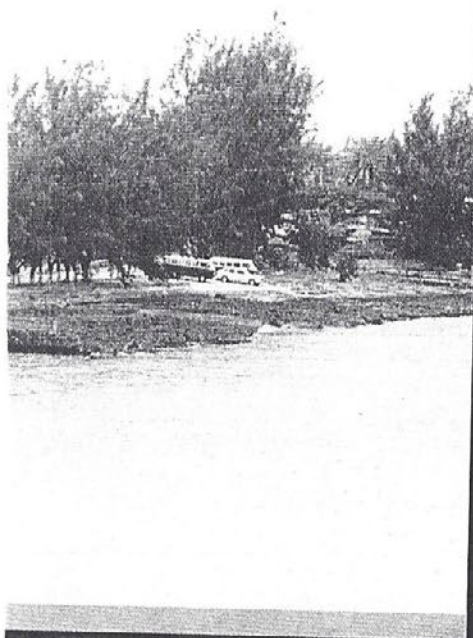

3

The simplicity of this home is a clear indicator of how Camanians lived in the early days. It survived many hurricanes and was inhabited until it was unfortunately demolished a few years ago.

4

Gramma Julia's

East End Shack