ABOUT

Craft has a long tradition in the Cayman Islands. Initially born out of necessity, functional crafts soon became highly decorative, evolving into our earliest tangible forms of creative expression. Today, the boundaries between craft and art continue to dissolve. Where thatch baskets were once purely functional, Caymanian artisans have begun to experiment with forms and decoration.

This exhibition features a diverse range of contemporary craft objects, by makers from all six districts, who are using traditional and cutting-edge techniques across diverse practices including: basketry, ceramics, textiles, fibre, paper, glass, metal, and wood craft. Some of the featured artists seek to maintain and revive longstanding traditional forms, while others combine age-old techniques with modern materials. The connecting thread is that all of the featured work involves the hands of a maker - at their very root they are about process, technique and material.

Through REVIVE we seek to open up the conversation about the role that craft plays in our society and to engage visitors in the creative process; to illustrate the ways in which our historical traditions continue to evolve in the 21st century; and to contextualize craft within the wider history of Caymanian art.
